Welcome to Flaming Geyser

Flaming Geyser State Park is a 480-acre day-use park with more than three miles of freshwater shoreline on the Green River. The park’s most unique feature is its “geysers” (methane seeps). In 1911, miners drilled a coal test hole at the edge of Christy Creek. The miners hit pockets of methane gas and salty water at around 1,000 feet down. For many years, fire reached heights of 25 feet and nearly 20 gallons of water a minute spewed from the hole. Because most of the gas has been depleted, the geyser has been reduced to a small flicker with dribbles of water. The park offers more than four miles of trails for hikers. Equestrians may enjoy the 1-mile trail or a 25-acre open field. The park also features white-water kayaking for experts on the Green River, fishing and swimming. The park is very popular for remote-control, model-airplane flying.

Flaming Geyser and river habitat interpretive walks lead by a park ranger are usually available with one week’s advance request for groups of 10 to 20 people. There also is a self-guided, Salmon Interpretive Trail that is accessible to people with disabilities.

Flaming Geyser State Park offers the following amenities and facilities to make your visit more enjoyable and comfortable:

- Four picnic shelters. Reservable online at www.parks.state.wa.us or by calling (888) CAMPOUT or (888) 226-7688.
