Welcome to Lincoln Rock State Park

Lincoln Rock State Park is an 80-acre camping park with 2,300 feet of freshwater shoreline, on the east side of 31-mile-long Lake Entiat, a reservoir created by Rocky Reach Dam blocking the flow of the Columbia River north of Wenatchee. The park has expansive green lawns that span the shores of the lake, a popular place for swimming, water skiing and respite from the hot sun.

Overnight accommodations

The park has 27 standard (tent) campsites and 70 utility campsites (35 with water and electricity, 35 full-utility sites). Maximum site length is 65 feet (may have limited availability). All lawn areas, including the tent area, are irrigated daily. To reserve a campsite, call (888) CAMPOUT or (888) 226-7688, or visit online at www.parks.state.wa.us.

Those who want a little comfort with their camping can reserve one of four primitive cabins that overlook Lake Entiat. If you want even more comfort you can reserve one of eight deluxe cabins that have the amenities of the primitive cabins plus a kitchenette (microwave, sink, mini-fridge), larger dining table, and a restroom with shower. They sleep 5-6 guests and a queen futon and a twin bunk bed.

Lincoln Rock has 340 feet of reservable boat moorage space. This space is located on five docks. Moorage space can be reserved from May 15 through Sept. 15 and is available on a first-come, first-served basis the remainder of the season. Reservations can be made by calling (888) CAMPOUT or (888) 226-7688.

Park history

Lincoln Rock State Park is named for a prominent rock formation visible across the Columbia River that resembles the profile of President Abraham Lincoln. The formation, which is carved into a cliff at the mouth of Swakane Canyon, was long-recognized by Native Americans and Euro-American settlers as resembling a human face.

In 1898, Charles H. Schoff took a photo of the rock resembling a human face. In the July 1902 issue of The Ladies Home Journal, a photograph of Lincoln Rock taken by M. P. Spencer was published as part of an array titled “Rocks That Have Faces on Them.” This led to the feature’s national recognition.

In 1945, a proposal was made for the state to acquire the land encompassing Lincoln Rock as a park. Ultimately, the plan was dropped due to the cost of acquiring the land. In 1981, the Chelan County Public Utility District developed the present-day park across the water from Lincoln Rock to be managed by the Washington State Parks and Recreation Commission. Originally planned to be called Eastgate, the park’s name was changed to Lincoln Rock at the request of locals.

Welcome. Please remember a Discover Pass is required to visit a state park or other state-managed recreation lands.
